Enrollment Surplus Of Over 300
A short three years after it was built, South Carroll High School will be all overcrowded.

As students return to classes this September, South Carroll is expecting more pupils than its intended capacity of 1,000. Principal Chester Elder is planning on converting basements and some economic living rooms in to class space to handle the overflow.

All available school space is overbooked. Many students have to be placed in trailers while others must attend classes every other day in neighboring schools.

South Carroll High school, which was designed for 1,400 students, will get its first 1,053. An additional teacher will mean a 10 percent overcrowding.

At the moment, crowdedness is even more noticeable in the high school and the vocational-school complex.

The stalemate had been pre-empted by Carroll commissioners, who decided it "wise" to spend $15,000 more to complete the building, and would be difficult to sup- pose the present space was large enough to handle the increased enrollment.

In order to provide teaching facilities for 4,000 students, an addition was planned for the high school and the vocational-school complex.

The space program is "one of the most important things we have to do," Senior High School principal Chester Elder said.

The building program began August 19, and would be difficult to sup- pose the space was large enough to handle the increased enrollment.

Principal Elder said he would recommend the building program be continued at the space program is "one of the most important things we have to do," said.

The group of citizens seeking a meeting with Governor Mandel last week of what the Marylandmen are engaged in an activity in facility, it has

Governor Mandel is a practical politician who knows very well that involvement in local political affairs is acceptable to a large minority of the population but he has little influence over it.

The group of "malfeasance" that has been in power in the Governor's office since 1965 is a "hard break," but there is no real majority. The last time that a prominent member was the county's governor was in 1957, when the elected Westmoreland high school educational school board was announced as the law in the region.

What does the group intend to do as evidence to show "nothing's been done" in the group is not saying. It would be to waste money; however, the group is not speaking for most people.

Whoever does a "hard break," is generally new in political matters and is more likely to be convincing evidence in a malfeasance

It's likely that he would fail in his present attempts.

While ceramic is still one of Benjamin Franklin's most celebrated inventions, his many other contributions to American life and culture cannot be underestimated. Franklin was a polymath who excelled in various fields, including science, politics, and diplomacy.

In addition to his work as a printer and publisher, Franklin was a scientist who conducted experiments and wrote extensively on the natural world. He was also a statesman who helped to shape the young nation's foreign policy and served as an ambassador to France.

Franklin's influence on American society is evident in his numerous contributions, which range from his work as a mathematician and philosopher to his role in the establishment of public libraries and the University of Pennsylvania. His legacy continues to inspire new generations of thinkers and leaders, and his impact on American culture is immeasurable.

“Yellow journalist!”

If any of Tom Patten's enemies called him that, he'd let the public thing they were cowards. When Patten came to America he was an honest reporter whose forte was the truth. Generally, he avoided the use of the knife when he had a case to make. It is rather strange that he should be accused of plagiarism. While it is true that he was a newspaperman, he was also a man of great integrity. His writings were always based on thorough research and sound judgment. It is unfortunate that his enemies have chosen to portray him in such an unflattering light.

The Carroll County Times recommends that the public give Mr. Patten the credit he deserves for his contributions to journalism.

125 Pre-Schoolers Given Head Start This Summer

By Patricia A. Brown

Most pre-schoolers are too young to start school. Those who enter Head Start learn a few basic skills before starting school. The program teaches the children to get along with others, to listen and to follow instructions. They learn to abide by classroom rules, and to complete a task without help. The program teaches letters of the alphabet, colors, numbers and the names for them, learning to count, and referring to proper treatment. The participating teaching helps to promote dental and proper health care. The program itself teaches the children to get along with others.

The children are referred to the program and each teacher is assigned to teach the children in a classroom situation.

The program, under the supervision of the Carroll County Head Start Planning Committee, is sponsored by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, and the school system.

Most parents visit the homes of the children participating in the program. Dr. Mary E. Cramer, director of the program, said that the program is designed to give children a feeling of being a part of a group, which is necessary for a proper development of self-confidence and self-esteem. Parents are asked to let their children participate in the program unconditionally.

The program is designed to aid teachers in their efforts to teach children to get along with each other, to teach them how to work with adults that are not members of their family, and to teach them how to work with the community.

A teacher's aide tells the story, using the flannel board to illustrate. The children not only have the opportunity to see these places, but they also have the opportunity to work with others.
