United Way relocates designated donations

Recently, people have been sending payroll deductions to groups that are not members.

By J.L. LAWSON

United Way of Central Maryland representatives noted a need for a message directed at those who were not aware that payroll deductions to groups that are not members are confusing.

The county commissioners voted Sept. 18 to allow Carroll to maintain the only county in the nation with a federal equal access rule that does not allow employees the option of giving to the organization through direct payroll deductions.

The United Way promised designated giving 25 years ago to persuade more people to participate in the works leading to the county commission's decision. United Way representatives and dedicated giving in the county became a paycheck deduction plan.

In recent years, designated giving has had an unintended effect. United Way officials and volunteers say people who donate through payroll deductions are increasingly directing their donations to the needy, but to places such as Garrett Forest School in Orange Mills. L. H. Larmour, the organization's program officer, said he sees the children's museum at the former Horne's that are not United Way member groups.

Under the current designated gift setup, a donor can send the horne's museum his or her donation is to the county's computers, United Way representatives and designated giving is given to the organization through direct payroll deduction.

United Way of Central Maryland headquarters are in the federal building on Bridal Path. The board will hear comments on the proposed calendar and vote on it at the Nov. 19 board meeting, according to school system officials.

The Carroll school board chairman, John Price, said earlier this year that the board had not established a calendar for the 2000-2001 school year in response to the concerns of the school system. She did not have an exact date for the establishment of the calendar but said that it would be sometime in the next couple of months. She said the calendar would be established by the school system.

The board will also hear comments on the proposed calendar and vote on it at the Nov. 19 board meeting, according to school system officials.

Democrats facing long primary

Associated Press
WASHINGTON — The Democratic presidential campaign is in a tight four-way race that could last until the summer, and the democrats blame it on the intrigu-est of the beefy militants in the war on terrorism.

The party has seen the candidates spend more time on the Iraq war than on the economy and health care, and it also has seen the candidates call each other names.

The candidates, including former Utah Gov. Jon Huntsman, have publicly criticized each other, but the campaign has been more civil.

Most of the candidates have mentioned the war in their state and of the candidates.

Mr. Huntsman, a former Utah governor, said he believes he has a better chance of winning than

Clinton plans help for disabled

Associated Press

NEW YORK — Dealing the government in a major blow to its efforts to save money, the White House on Wednesday shelved plans to end its $36 million-a-year program to help the disabled and the poor.

The program, known as the Community Services Block Grant, was developed in the 1970s to provide funds for community-based services that would have been provided by public agencies.

But the program has been criticized for being too broad and not being focused enough on helping the disabled and the poor.

"We're excited about this new approach to helping the disabled and the poor," Clinton said in a statement. "It allows us to focus on the needs of the disabled and the poor, and it's a good way to do it.

Venezuela’s Chavez tours Asia seeking economic deals

SEOUL, South Korea — Venezuelan President Hugo Chavez, on a two-week visit to East Asia, arrived Wednesday in South Korea.

"He's coming to South Korea to promote economic cooperation," Chavez told reporters. "I'm also calling on our federal human resources agency, the Office of Personnel Management, to ensure that every agency has a program to set an example by opening career opportunities to people with disabilities.

"It's possible that some reticent business owners might still have a hard time getting approval for government contracts. But I think the president will do a great job," Chavez said.

It’s what they do, not what the school board says

Members of the Carroll County Board of Education were telling themselves that if they think the public will believe them, that’s fine. They’re not going to be held accountable.

The school board last week ignored the county commissioners’ request that any decisions for a proposed Westminster-area high school be put off until after the election.

The mere fact that it was the county commissioners who had to do this is the same school board that had to do it when they lost control of the county commissioners in 2000.

The result of that was that insurance benefits and other incentives were paid to the school officials.

Schools should heed middle-class minorities' performance

WASHINGTON - School districts should do more to ensure minority students perform as well as white students, an expert panel said Wednesday.

"We know that middle-class minority students are more likely to be dropping out of school on a toxic site and the possibility of failing is a very real concern," said Regina M. Costantini, MD, president of the American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists. "This is an issue just unfolding in our communities such as Shaker Heights and Independence."

Science fiction dream becomes a reality

Fusion glass was inspired by science fiction's flat-screen TV

Associated Press

CORKING, N. Y. — It was an experiment in the 1960s that led to a technology that a generation later has become the material of choice in car dashboards, flat-screen TVs and the interior of the space shuttle.

Fusion glass, with its ability to change colors in response to temperature or light, has the potential to revolutionize the way we interact with technology. But its development has been a long and complex process, involving scientists, engineers and artists from around the world.

One of the main challenges in developing fusion glass was to create a material that could withstand the intense heat and long periods of exposure to sunlight and heat that shuttle crew members experience. This required the use of rare earth metals and other materials that were difficult to work with at high temperatures.

In the 1960s, scientists at the Corning Glass Works in New York State began experimenting with new glass recipes that could withstand high temperatures. They focused on Rare Earth Glasses, which are made up of rare earth metals and other materials that can change color when exposed to heat or light.

By the 1970s, Corning had developed a process for creating Rare Earth Glasses that could change color in response to temperature or light. This was the foundation for the development of fusion glass, which is made by melting Rare Earth Glasses and other materials together in a high-temperature furnace.

Fusion glass is now used in a variety of applications, from car dashboards to flat-screen TVs to the interior of the space shuttle. Its ability to change colors and respond to temperature or light makes it ideal for use in these applications.

In addition to its use in technology, fusion glass is also being explored as a material for use in art. Artists are using the material to create unique and stunning works of art, such as sculptures and installations.

Despite its many uses, fusion glass is still a relatively new material. As scientists and engineers continue to explore its potential, it is likely that we will see even more innovative applications for this incredible material in the future.

Billick different a person as head coach

Associated Press

Baltimore — Steve Billick may not be going to the Super Bowl, but the Ravens are going to the AFC title game. The Lombardi Trophy is his "first small goal."

Billick is poised front and center on the Ravens' status as the NFL's most compelling team this season. A team that began the year as offbeat underachievers has become smoldering, boisterous, and unbeatable, both on the field and in the locker room.

"We're a team that's going to be a lot of fun," Billick said. "We're not going to get into any sort of emotional, you know, 'Hollywood' mode."

Billick, who was tied for the most wins of any NFL head coach last year, has been more successful than any other coach in the league in the preseason.

"I think that's what we're going to do," Billick said. "I think that's what we're doing.

Realignment is next task

NFL Notebook

As soon as the NFL announced the 1996 realignment, the league had a new test: whether it could resist the temptation to make too many changes all at once.

The league has announced that it will make some changes for the 1997 season, including the addition of a 16th team to the NFL. The new team will begin play in 1997.

The NFL has also announced that the 1997 season will consist of a 16-game schedule for all teams, with each team playing four games against teams from the same division.

In addition, the NFL has announced that the 1997 season will feature a new playoff format, with the top four teams in each division earning a berth in the playoffs. The top two teams in each division will earn a bye in the first round of the playoffs, while the third and fourth place teams will play in a one-game playoff for the third and fourth seeds.

The NFL has also announced that the 1997 season will feature a new divisional format, with each team playing eight games against teams from its own division and eight games against teams from other divisions.

The league has also announced that the 1997 season will feature a new kickoff rule, with the team with the better record in the divisional games receiving the kickoff in the regular season games.

 TERRELL, Calif. — When the Washington Redskins visit Arizona Cardinals on Sunday night, it will be a battle of two teams that have been in opposite sides of the NFL for a long time.

The Redskins are the team that has been on top of the league for the past three seasons, while the Cardinals have been on the bottom for the past three seasons.

"We've got to find a way to stop them," Redskins head coach Steve Spurrier said. "We've got to find a way to stop them."

Spurrier said he doesn't expect his team to be able to stop the Redskins this weekend, despite the fact that the Redskins have struggled in recent weeks.

"They're a tough team, and they've got a lot of weapons," Spurrier said. "We've got to find a way to stop them."

History, bass abound at tidal Potomac River

Even the name, Nanjemoy Creek, sounds promising.

Nanjemoy Creek is a Charles County icon, and the bass fishing there is legendary. But the chub, drum, and perch also are prevalent and offer a good opportunity to catch a limit.

But the history of Nanjemoy Creek and its namesake goes back a long time. The story of Nanjemoy Creek and its namesake goes back to the time when the area was inhabited by the Nanjemoy tribe of the Piscataway Indian tribe. The Nanjemoy were a group of people who lived in the area and were known for their fishing skills.

The creek was named after the tribe, and it has been a fishing spot for centuries. The creek is now part of the Potomac River system, and it is one of the best places to fish for bass in the area.

Albacore fishing provides rush

"I never got into the drugs or the drink... Actually, I've never caught an albacore."

After seeing a half-dozen greenfins about 10 miles off Smith Island, Md., I decided it was time to head out for the first time to see if I could catch an albacore. I had always thought of them as the best of all tuna species, the ones that are the most likely to put up a good fight.

I've been fishing for tuna for about 10 years now, and I've always been fascinated by the albacore. They are one of the fastest, most acrobatic fish in the ocean, and they are known for their ability to leap out of the water and catch their prey in mid-air.

The fishing was not bad, but it was not great. I caught three albacore, but they were small. I was hoping to catch a bigger one, but I didn't have any luck.

But the experience was still great. I had a lot of fun trying to catch these fish, and I'm looking forward to going back out again soon.

STUDY SHOWS KIDS WILL CHEAT IF IT HELPS THEM WIN

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — A survey of top youth league and high school players found a surprising number of them — 27 percent — said they would cheat to win.

The survey, which was conducted among 1,000 players in the United States, found that 60 percent of the players said they had cheated at some point in their careers.

The study asked the players about their experiences with cheating and found that 35 percent of them had cheated at least once.

The study also found that 40 percent of the players had been cheated on by their opponents.

The survey was conducted by the Games Industry Research Institute and the Institute for Scientific Research.

The results suggest that cheating is widespread among youth and high school athletes.

The mid-Maryland Fall League is in full swing

BY PATRICK STOTZER

Sandy Bertino

The league is for the kids, but for old timers like me, it's a chance to relive the glory days. It's just a fun way to get the kids interested in the game. I've been playing for 30 years and I still love it.

The league is open to players of all ages and abilities. It's a great way for kids to get some more playing time and for adults to stay active. I highly recommend it to anyone who loves the game of baseball.

The league meets on Sundays at 9 a.m. in the fall and spring. It's a casual game and everyone is welcome to join in.

Sandy Bertino, a longtime player and coach, is one of the organizers of the league. He said it's a great way to keep the sport alive and to encourage kids to keep playing.

If you're interested, contact Sandy at 410-555-1234 or visit the league's website at www.marylandfallleague.com.

More are in favor of bridal registries and wardrobes than ever before. Why?" a New York Times article asks.

But why are we still using them? It's not clear. Some experts believe that they are an outdated tradition, while others argue that they are a practical way to help couples get started in their new lives. Whatever the reason, it's clear that there are many different opinions on the matter.

There are a few things that we can say for sure. First, bridal registries are a great way to get gifts for couples who are getting married. They are also a great way to make sure that you are getting gifts that the couple actually wants.

Second, bridal registries are a great way to get gifts for couples who are getting married. They are also a great way to make sure that you are getting gifts that the couple actually wants.

Finally, bridal registries are a great way to get gifts for couples who are getting married. They are also a great way to make sure that you are getting gifts that the couple actually wants.

In conclusion, bridal registries are a great way to get gifts for couples who are getting married. They are also a great way to make sure that you are getting gifts that the couple actually wants.

The next time you hear about a bridal registry, think about all of the reasons why they are a great idea. And then decide for yourself if you want to be part of the bridal registry tradition.
